OBJECTIVE

The International Kassel Summer School: Shaping the World Economy offers the opportunity to learn about and to question the reasons for the current form of globalization. A critical understanding of globalization is a must for all those who want to have a debate on par with politicians and management.

The seminar program consists of various units including topics such as the functioning of the global economy, the globalization of production and institutions of the global economy as well as detailed discussions on design options and strategic approaches in North-South relations.

The summer school brings together activists from trade unions, social movements and political organizations from both the North and the South. By sharing experiences about projects and campaigns with each other, participants get new ideas and perspectives and extend their international network.
